WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A low pressure trough will linger along the California coast for a few more days before weakening. A batch of moisture will move into the region from the west as it moves through the trough. Wet mountain thunderstorms are possible for the next few days and there may be some showers in the northwest mountains as well. The marine layer was quite deep this morning and will help keep the Coast Range supplied with clouds. Drier weather will start Monday as the trough weakens and begins to move east. The northwest mountains and Lake Tahoe area may still see a few wet afternoon thunderstorms Monday and Tuesday. A high pressure ridge out over the Pacific will nose into the region in the latter half of next week. Overall, next week will have a warming and drying trend. Temperatures in the warmest inland areas will return to more seasonable temperatures of the 90s to around 100. Winds will be fairly light and mostly southerly or westerly until late in the week when some light northwest to northeast winds are expected for a few days. The recent moist weather pattern increased fuel moisture in most areas, particularly at higher elevations in the north and east, but at lower elevations not so much. The driest areas are the lower elevations in the southern portion of the Geographic Area. Thunderstorms over the next few days will continue to be wet and probably make new starts, but fire growth will most likely be relatively slow. Warmer, drier conditions will gradually return to the region next week and holdover fires may spring to life.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Temperatures will warm and humidity will lower away from the coast this weekend as a Pacific trough weakens over the West Coast. Maximum temperatures will be in the upper 60s and 70s across the mountains and 80s to low 90s in the valleys today, and then 70s to low 80s across the mountains and mid-80s to mid-90s in the valleys Sunday. Minimum humidity will be mainly above 20% away from the deserts today and then between 15% and 30% Sunday. There will be little change in temperature and humidity across the region next week as a weak Pacific trough remains over the West Coast. Isolated afternoon showers and thunderstorms will form over the Sierra this afternoon, with dry conditions expected across the entire region starting Sunday. A weak area of low pressure will form off the Central California Coast which may bring isolated afternoon showers and thunderstorms back to the Sierra Wednesday through the end of next week. Westerly afternoon winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph will surface across the Tehachapi Mountains, Antelope Valley, and Banning Pass through the middle of next week.
